The Life and Speeches of
HENRY CLAY.

HENRY CLAY has been in the city of New York, in company with Mr. Sewall, who is at present with us for the most complete edition of Mr. Clay's Speeches of great value to the student of American history and statistics, we shall publish in the next few days, a new edition of his Speeches in plain, simple, and unadorned language, in the form of our Dial. It is a new edition, and contains all the speeches printed in two large handsome volumes, with the addition of a new page, containing a new address, which we have been able to procure, and which we think will be read with much interest and pleasure, and is considered as one of the best of Mr. Clay, and one of the best of his published ones. Mr. Clay's new address, which we have been able to procure, and which we think will be read with much interest and pleasure, and is considered as one of the best of Mr. Clay, and one of the best of his published ones. Mr. Clay's new address, which we have been able to procure, and which we think will be read with much interest and pleasure, and is considered as one of the best of Mr. Clay, and one of the best of his published ones.
